Foreword

The English text of the International Medium Edition of the Universal Decimal Classification (UDC) is issued in two volumes. The systematic tables were published as BS 1000M : Part 1 : 1985. This second volume contains the index to the tables and constitutes this Part of BS 1000M.

Introduction

1 This is a computer-generated index, produced by permutation of terms, and intervention has been kept to a minimum. This means that the entries in the index, in the main, reflect the wording in the tables. As this fact was kept in mind during the compilation of the tables, a large number of synonyms were included, which it is hoped will compensate for the absence of cross-references.

2 Some terms occur many times over in the tables. In most cases, it has not been possible to add qualifiers in the index to distinguish such terms by indicating the context (although sometimes the wording of the original class description already includes adequate context information). Some index entries therefore consist of a term followed by several class numbers. For example, 'Additives' is indexed, unqualified, to three numbers: .002.35, 631.8.022.3 and 675.92.04. The user has to consult the tables to find out that .002.35 refers to additives from the production point of view (in the common auxiliary tables), 631.8.022.3 refers to them in the context of agricultural fertilizers and 675.92.04 refers to them in the context of imitation leather. The qualifiers appearing in the subentries under 'Additives' are terms that appear in the class descriptions themselves, but these do not always fully indicate the context, and here too the user needs to consult the tables. For example does not give the general number for chemical additives; although the term 'chemical additives' does occur in the class description at 628.162, it is in the context of water treatment only. It will also be seen that the subentries under 'Additives' include several kinds of additive indexed to various subdivisions of 66.022, in the special auxiliary subdivisions under 66, which is the general number for 'Chemical and related industries'. Thus, if a number for chemical additives in general were required, 66.022 could be used. Although, as it happens, the term 'additives' does not occur in the class description at that number, it does occur at many of the subdivisions.

Conclusion: although the index does not fully indicate the context of the terms listed, it does indicate the range of possible locations for a concept and, if used with care, can guide the user to the right area of the tables.

3 It has not been possible to differentiate homonyms in the index, e.g. the various senses of 'Pitch' (acoustic frequency, vehicle movement, bituminous substance, slope, etc.) are interfiled in a single entry.

4 The alphabetical arrangement is word-by-word. Spaced initials file at the beginning of a letter sequence, e.g. 'A', 'B', 'C' weapons forms the first entry in the index, but unspaced initials are filed as words, e.g. 'ABC dials' comes after 'Abbreviations'. If the spacing or punctuation in the sought term is not known, all possible forms should be borne in mind. A hyphen has a filing value intermediate between a space and a character, e.g. 'Fire-boats' comes after 'Fire' and its 64 subheadings, but all hyphenated compounds beginning 'Fire-' come before 'Firearms'. As the use of hyphens is very variable in English, all possible forms should be borne in mind: spaced, hyphenated and single word. An oblique stroke has the same value as a hyphen, e.g. 'Water/cement ratio' files between 'Water-bugs' and 'Water-cycling'. Apostrophes are disregarded, e.g. 'Mothers', 'Mother's' and 'Mothers'' are interfiled in a single entry.

5 A term followed by 'and' sometimes forms a separate entry from the simple term, but this does not affect the alphabetical order; e.g. 'Embossing and' is separate from 'Embossing', but the filing position is exactly as if 'and' formed the first subheading.

6 Because the index terms are extracted unchanged from the tables, they occur in various grammatical forms and the user should bear in mind the possibility of different inflexions, parts of speech and grammatical numbers, which may not be adjacent, e.g. 'Dam', 'Damming' and 'Dams' form different entries and are separated from each other by unrelated words such as 'Damage', 'Damask' and 'Damnation'. Particular care should be taken to check both singulars and plurals: in an index of this size, the separation of similar entries may be very great, e.g. 'Form' is separated from 'Forms' by 184 entries. With irregular plurals, the distance may be even greater: 'Man' is separated from 'Men' by several hundred entries (and 'Men' from 'Men's' by 32 more).

7 Care should be taken to read the class number accurately, in particular to distinguish auxiliary numbers from main numbers. If symbols in auxiliary numbers, such as parentheses or the initial point, were to be overlooked, it would cause confusion, as the auxiliary tables are separately displayed at the beginning of the scheme. In the two numbers given are point-of-view auxiliaries and should be sought in table I(i); but in the number given is a main number and is found in class O.

'Practice .001.85, .004.14'

'Practice ... codes of 006'

8 Finally, the user is advised emphatically: never classify solely from the index; always verify in the tables.
